New Ross sawmill destroyed by fire

SOUTH SHORE BULLETIN STAFF

NEW ROSS – The L.E. Elliott lumber mill in New Ross was decimated by fire on the evening of July 3.

Firefighters managed to save a planer mill that was about 100 feet from the sawmill that was leveled.

Fire Chief Lyle Russell said the call came in at about 5 p.m. and four departments responded from New Ross, Kentville, Chester Basin and Western Shore with an estimated 35 firefighters attending.

Russell said that his crew was at the scene until about 10:30 p.m. making sure that the fire was completely out.

“Basically, the mill had two major buildings the sawmill which is what burned and planer mill,” he said, adding that the yard was full of combustible material and backed into surrounding woods.

“You have wood chips, lumber, logs, it was just packed full of materials. The yard was definitely full of product.”

He said that there had been no official cause confirmed.

Owner Peter Elliott told a media outlet that the business, originally built in 1933, did not have insurance and estimates that it would cost about $1 million to rebuild the mill.

In an interview following the fire, he said that he didn’t know what his next steps would be, but said he was happy that no one was hurt and it didn’t spread to any other properties.

New sidewalk patio incident causes emotions to run high

By ED HALVERSON
ed.halverson@southshorebulletin.ca

MAHONE BAY - A new sidewalk patio installed outside local restaurant Eli + Trix has drawn the ire of some residents of Mahone Bay.

Town Mayor Suzanne Lohnes-Croft says she has been overwhelmed by people calling for the patio to be removed since it went up and a hastily called meeting to revoke the patio permit did little to calm tensions.

The wooden patio occupies two parking spaces directly in front of the restaurant at 538 Main Street.

On Thursday, July 3, the town called a special meeting of Mahone Bay council to discuss revoking the building permit it had issued to the restaurant’s owner, Danielle King.

Many of those opposed to the patio are tying it to the death of centenarian Barbara Minard. A retired Anglican minister, Minard is alleged to have fallen at or near the site but there has been no investigation into the cause of the alleged fall nor any determination of fault.

Members of Minard’s family present in the gallery at the special meeting were upset that council didn’t order the immediate demolition of the sidewalk patio. They said they were told in a meeting that morning with Mayor Suzanne Lohnes-Croft and CAO Dylan Heide that the patio would be removed by the end of the day.

Eli + Trix owner Danielle King says CAO Heide visited her restaurant in person during the noon hour and told her council was meeting at 3 p.m. and following that meeting she would have to remove the patio or Mahone Bay workers would come and remove it by 5 p.m.

However, during the public meeting, both the mayor and the CAO denied making any such promises or demands, insisting that they only said council would discuss the removal of the patio at the 3 p.m. meeting and it would be up to council to decide the outcome.

The special public meeting was announced on the town’s Facebook page less than three hours prior to its scheduled start time. King was unable to appear on such short notice but was told she would not be permitted to speak at the meeting regardless. She sent an email to all council members in advance of the meeting outlining her concerns. In a copy of King’s email obtained by the South Shore Bulletin she states:

- Sidewalk patios were approved in 2008;
- I have been working with the ToMB and members of council for over 3 months on this project;
- All required permits were submitted, reviewed and approved as appropriate and the patio was designed and built to Nova Scotia Building Code and Nova Scotia Accessibility standards;
- I’ve worked with the ToMB to ensure compliance with specifications and they have provided oversight at every step;

Royal Norwegian Navy Band comes to Lunenburg, 80 years after the end of the Second World War

By LOGAN RING
NSCC Student Reporter

LUNENBURG - The country of Norway and the Town of Lunenburg have a deep connection.

According to the Fisheries Museum of the Atlantic, in an article written by Hilda Russell, it was 1940 when Norway was invaded by the Nazis. At that time all Norwegian ships were instructed to head to allied ports as it was no longer safe to head home. One of these allied ports was Halifax.

Roughly 2,000 sailors came to Halifax. The fear of spies at the time was high. This meant that sailors were let ashore and could only enter a Norwegian base. The Norwegians could only leave their ships under the condition that a camp, paid for by Norway, would be constructed.

Halifax was not a suitable location for a Norwegian base, so a plan was drafted by a member of parliament at the time, John James Kinley. He offered his electoral district and his hometown of Lunenburg for the construction of a Norwegian base, and Camp Norway was built soon after.

In September of 1940 the town become home to 17 Norwegian whaling vessels, the construction of the barracks was finished within six weeks. When Camp Norway was finished it flew both the Union Jack and the Norwegian flag.

Throughout its three years of operation more Norwegian sailors came to Camp Norway, which became a training base for the Norwegian navy and the 17 whaling ships were transformed into marine escort ships.

To commemorate this comradery, and the 80th anniversary of the end of the second world war, the Royal Norwegian Navy band came to Lunenburg on June 30, as part of their Nova Scotia trip that also saw them take part in the Halifax Tattoo for the first time.

The day started off at the site of Camp Norway, at the ABCO factory in Lunenburg, where a small service was held to commemorate Camp Norway. In attendance there were family members of the sailors who immigrated to Lunenburg and laid down roots in the town during and after the Second World War.

This service also included speeches from Norwegian Military officers, MP Jessica Fancy-Landry, MLA Susan Corkum-Greek, and the mayor of Lunenburg, Jamie Myra.

In the service there was a small unit of Norwegian navy members holding rifles, called the Norwegian Navy Honour guard, which accompanied the band.

The Norwegian national anthem was played, and the faint sounds of singing could be heard. The service concluded with the laying of a wreath and a military salute.

The band then moved to the Lunenburg waterfront, where they performed a small concert for the town. The performance was introduced by the town crier Stephen Findlay and when the concert concluded, the band and the Honour Guard paraded through Lunenburg, finishing their parade next to the cenotaph.

New sidewalk patio incident causes emotions to run high

- The patio has been inspected by the ToMB, the municipal Fire Marshall, and NS Alcohol and Gaming. All have approved and deem it fit for use.

The sidewalk patio is covered under the town's Streets and Sidewalks bylaw section 25 (2) which says the town's Director of Operations may issue Street Use Permit for seasonal sidewalk cafes and restaurant seating once "they are satisfied that the proposed use of the street conforms with the requirements of this by-law and will not interfere with the public use of street, including traffic and pedestrian safety, snowplowing, and other street maintenance activities."

In her email, King went on to detail the economic impacts of revoking her permit, saying,

"This build-out has required months to design, approve, build, install, furnish and advertise. It represents an out-of-pocket expense of $10,000 and a lifeline for my restaurant and its employees. We have staffed up for the summer to season to accommodate the additional seating. Their jobs and the feasibility of the business itself is now at risk given the financial hit that the removal will give."

King expressed her condolences to the Minard family, "Barb has been a treasured customer of the restaurant since we opened. She recently celebrated her 100th birthday here with us - she was part of our family and will be greatly missed."

Despite a packed gallery that spilled into the hallway from council chambers, council members went in-camera at the start of the July 3 meeting for the reason of discussing potential litigation. In Nova Scotia, municipal councils are legally permitted to go "in-camera" or out of sight of the public to discuss certain issues including staffing issues and potential litigation.

After a 25-minute in-camera session, the public were permitted to return to council chambers and the meeting resumed.

Councillor Joe Feeney expressed his concerns about rushing to revoke a permit without following established due process. He made a motion to ask for a staff report on the bylaw permitting the sidewalk patios to be brought to council at the earliest opportunity.

Councillors around the table agreed that because of the speed at which the issue was brought to council, they did not have enough information to make an informed decision on an issue that will have long term implications for residents and businesses in the town.

Councillor Penny Carvery summed up the mood of council, "We haven't all had the opportunity to share the same information and we can't, in good conscious, make decisions as a group, as a council, without having as much information as we need. And I recognize the sense of urgency that is felt in the community, but we can't make a decision on the basis of feeling that urgency. We do need to take the time to gather as much information as we possibly can before coming to a decision."

Council agreed in a unanimous vote to have staff prepare the report.

Following that vote, Mayor Lohnes-Croft vacated her position as chair to make her own motion to immediately revoke the building permit. Having just voted for a staff report, the rest of council voted down the mayor's motion.

Asked about her motion afterwards, Lohnes-Croft said, "People are going to say I made an emotional decision and I'd like to think that I made a people decision, not emotional, and it's what the people wanted."

When asked what message is being sent to businesses when an owner that follows all the rules is penalized and told to tear down their infrastructure when the town changes its mind, Mayor Lohnes-Croft said she is a supporter of the business community.

She said even though this bylaw has been in place for almost 20 years, this is the first time anyone has attempted to build a sidewalk café. Lohnes-Croft said her problem isn't with the business but with this particular patio and, "where the place is located. There are many, many different things that I saw wrong with it where it was located."

King says town staff monitored the construction process and were on site to take measurements that ensured safety and accessibility standards were being met, and that the patio was situated in the designated place before the town issued a permit.

CAO Heide said during the special meeting that town staff will be contacting King to look into how they can work together to make the area safer.

King says she has seen people walking into the road around the patio even though there is a rerouted, fully accessible sidewalk included as part of the build. She is installing signs to make the pathway clearer for pedestrians. She has also ordered heavy steel plates to cover the gaps between the town sidewalk and the wooden sidewalk surrounding her patio to eliminate any trip hazards.

Council will meet again Tuesday morning to formally request the staff report on the Sidewalk Cafe bylaw. While staff prepare that report, residents will be invited to provide their feedback on the bylaw and both the feedback and report will be presented to council at a future meeting.

Mahone Bay restaurant owner threatened

By ED HALVERSON
ed.halverson@southshorebulletin.ca

MAHONE BAY - The owner of Eli + Trix says threats against her, and her staff have been escalating since Mahone Bay town council called a special meeting to discuss revoking the permit for the restaurant’s sidewalk patio.

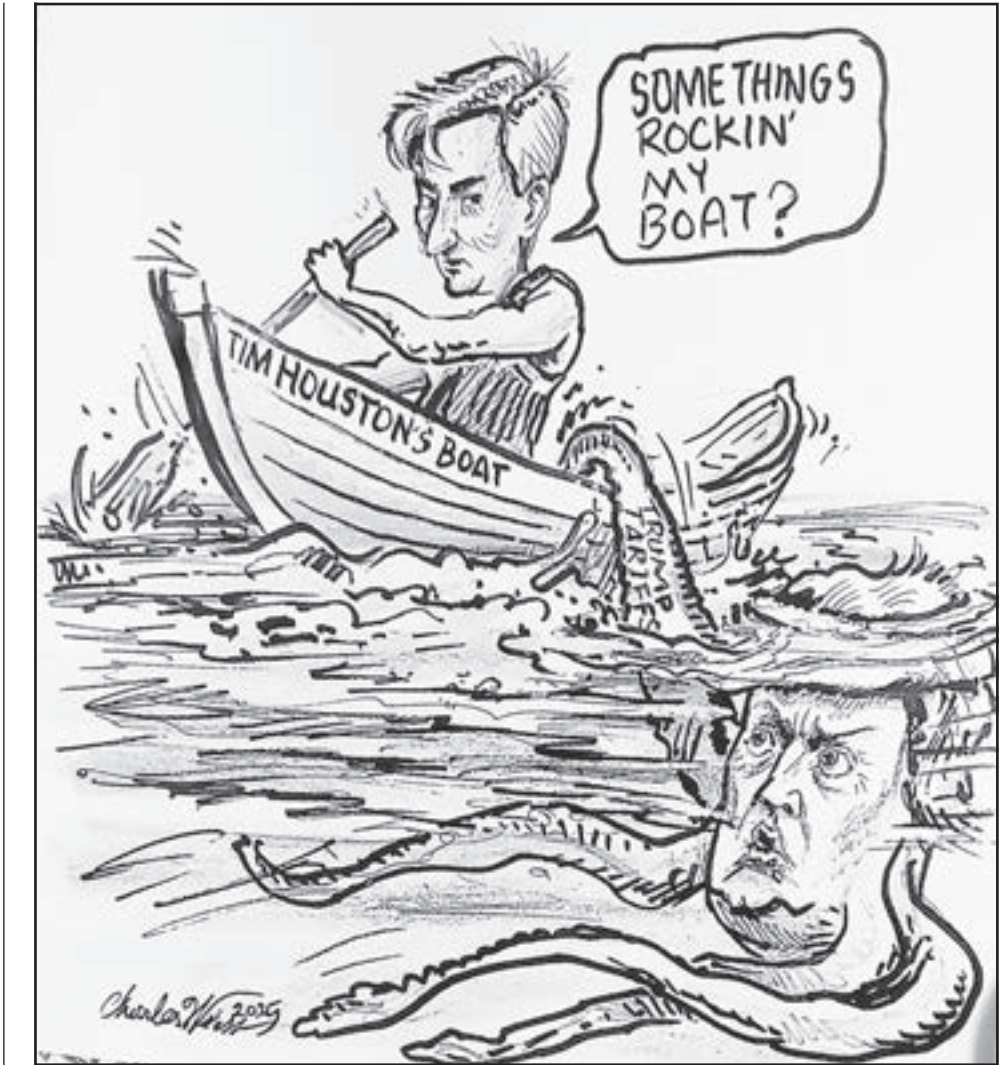

Danielle King says threats have been posted on social media referring to the decking as the “murder patio”, and some have mused about removing the patio themselves in a “Midnight strip job”.

Most worrying for King is a message she received containing a thinly veiled death threat where someone mentioned dismantling the patio themselves and that they hoped she would be there so she “could be just like Barbara”.

King says she notified RCMP who told her the person who made the threat is known to them and that person has been warned against making any further contact with King.

The person making the threat was referring to the death of Barbara Minard. Minard is a well-known figure in Mahone Bay. The 100-year-old retired Anglican minister passed away days after falling near the new sidewalk patio. The online posts are blaming King for building the patio and blocking the sidewalk, leading to Minard’s death.

To date, there has been no investigation into Minard’s fall and no information has come to light linking the fall to her passing.

An eyewitness to Minard’s fall who asked not to be identified, said, “She didn’t fall on the patio. She fell on the sidewalk where it transitioned to the street. She was alert and didn’t appear to hit her head.”

King applied for and received a permit from the Town of Mahone Bay to build a wooden patio which provides seating for the restaurant and extends the town sidewalk into the parking spaces adjacent to the existing sidewalk.

Jutting out from the front of the restaurant, the patio closes access to the concrete sidewalk. A wooden sidewalk is built in the two on-street parking spaces to go around the enclosed sidewalk café area and allows the public to move freely around the patio.

The wooden sidewalk provides rails to protect pedestrians from stepping into traffic and is constructed to dimensions that meet Nova Scotia Accessibility standards so that anyone using mobility devices still has full access to the sidewalk.

Fire department responds to call at Shoreham Retirement Village

By LOGAN RING
NSCC Student Reporter

CHESTER - On July 5, the Chester Volunteer Fire Department responded to a call at the Shoreham Retirement Village, where smoke was seen coming out of the building.

According to Cody Stevens, chief of the Chester Volunteer Fire Department, the source of the smoke was an electrical motor that seized and shorted in the buildings HVAC system and then filled the HVAC system with smoke. Which then caused smoke to spread throughout the building.

According to Stevens, around 50 personnel responded to the scene from multiple fire departments in the area including Chester, Chester Basin, Western Shore, Martins River, Lunenburg, Hubbard’s, Blandford and New Ross. The EHS’s response team and the RCMP also were on scene.

No damage was done to the building and the residents were evacuated in a timely manner. Highway 3 was obstructed for three hours; drivers were instructed to take an alternative route.

Residents returned to their rooms around 7 p.m. on Saturday night after the fire departments had cleared out the smoke in the area.

Area schools well represented at national science fair

By KEVIN MCBAIN
kevin.mcbain@southshorebulletin.ca

SOUTH SHORE – Four young students recently competed at the 63rd Canada-Wide Science Fair (CWSF) held in Fredericton, at the University of New Brunswick campus, June 1-6.

The fair is the country’s largest annual youth science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) event and nearly 400 student finalists from across Canada competed for more than $1.3 million in awards, scholarships and prizes.

The fair is for students in grades 7 through 12 and students are divided into three divisions – junior, intermediate and senior.

Making it through their school fairs and regional fairs to be able to compete for nationals were Veronica Lowe of Bayview Community School, Serena Sia of Bridgewater, Jasmine Ghaffari of Bayview Community School and Prithviraj Singh of Park View.

Lowe is a Grade 8 student, and she is 13 years of age. She earned a bronze medal in her category with her project where she tested the effects of ocean water on human skin, using banana peels as the substitute for skin.

“After one week, I concluded that there were no positive or negative results with the ocean water. They just stayed the same,” she said. “But I did find that the mineral salt in ocean water sparked an enzyme called tyrosinase.”

She said that has been linked to the progression of melanoma, which is why cancer rates are highest in coastal provinces.

She was originally going to see how ocean water affected eyesight, but she could not find anything that would replicate an eye to do the test.

“I realized that skin is the largest organ that a human possesses and it’s really important to know how skin reacts to different environments,” she said.

Lowe adds that the whole experience was “really fun. I was kind of concerned that it might be a little stressful, but once I got there, the people were nice, the ideas were great, and it was a great environment to be in.”

Sia is 15 years old and in Grade 9.

Her project was to look into the saying, if students who play instruments have higher math marks than students who don’t.

“I’ve been playing piano since I was six and I’ve seen a lot of research and was curious if it was true and what results would I get if I did this survey at my school?”

Her conclusion.

“I found out that this was not necessarily true. But there were three areas where there were differences. The students who play piano, the students who were serious musicians in a band and students who were serious musicians who played for more than five years, their marks were significantly higher than those who don’t play instruments,” she said.

She surveyed 234 students, and a few didn’t give their math marks, so she ended up with 207 results.

This was her second time at the national competition, and she said this time it was a lot more fun.

“There were so many amazing projects there and cool ideas. Also, Fredericton is really pretty.

Ghaffari is 14 and in Grade 9 at Bayview School.

“For my project, I compared natural materials with commercial moisturizers and studied their ability to retain skin moisture,” she said, noting that she used people from three different age groups and over two time periods – 30 minutes and three hours.

“I found that the commercial moisturizers dry the skin further than my control, and natural materials did retain the skin moisture relatively similar to her control and found they were able to retain skin moisture.”

Greg Thorbourne feted

kevin.mcbain@southshorebulletin.ca

LIVERPOOL – Greg Thorbourne is truly a life-long curling fanatic. He has curled, coached and umpired at almost every level you can think of, for close to 70 years and he was recently recognized by being installed into the Nova Scotia Curling Hall of Fame, under the builders’ category.

On June 7, a celebration hosted by the Liverpool Championship Host Society in partnership with the Liverpool Curling Club was held at the club, his second home, with about 45 people in attendance.

Emcee for the event was long-time friend John Wiles. Several speakers took the mic to share some of their stories and congratulations including MLA Kim Masland, Dan Baldwin from the Nova Scotia Curling Association, family and friends.

“It’s an honour. You don’t volunteer to do stuff for the recognition, but it’s nice to be recognized,” said the 77-year-old, following the event. “I do feel special because I was, and the turnout today, I was surprised. I didn’t think that many people liked me.”

Daughters Erin McArthur and Kim Thorbourne-Whalen shared their thoughts.

At the cenotaph there was another service that included a speech from by Trygve Bendiksbj, Norway’s ambassador to Canada. In this service more wreaths were laid along with the performance of both countries’ national anthems.

Gale Fullerton, a town councilor in Lunenburg and the council chairperson for the Zion Lutheran Church, was the key organizer for the event. She said that all the wreaths that were laid in the event were made by local florists in Lunenburg.

“Our local flower shop (made the wreaths) for not only for the cenotaph but for the graves and the monuments as well. So, there were, I think, 15 wreaths made all together,” she said.

Next there was a service at the Hillcrest cemetery where soldiers guarded and laid down wreaths at graves. A bugler was there along with a drummer to pay respect to the Norwegians who died and were buried at the cemetery.

The day concluded with a concert at the Zion Lutheran church in Lunenburg. Where the band’s woodwind ensemble played a free concert for the town that had a wide variety of music.

“They decided what they would do instead of having the entire band try to cram into the church and play... they decided that they would have their woodwind ensemble play a selection of music, there were about 12 musicians.” said Fullerton.

“They also had a singer... she’s a young woman that is opera trained and she’s a soprano, and her voice; it gave me goosebumps. It really did.” said Fullerton.

Fullerton says it’s important to highlight historic friendships between countries.

“I think it’s wonderful, you know. This is the story of a wonderful friendship between two countries and especially right now in the world that everything’s in such an uncertain state. You know, I think it is important for us to acknowledge the friendships that we have.”

Fullerton said “it was the collective effort of a lot of people, a lot of volunteers in Lunenburg that said, “This is really great. I want to help. It’s nice to see the community come together.”

“On the day of their wedding, Claire Hupman, the ice maker at the Liverpool Curling Club at the time, had to send Dad home to get ready – because he was still making ice. He was almost late to his own wedding,” said Thorbourne-Whalen.

Curling runs deep in the Thorbourne family – grandfather, Bruce used to take Greg to the rink when he was just four or five years old. They would be at the rink early in the mornings, throwing rocks. “And that same tradition continued with us, his daughters, and then with his granddaughter, Kya,” she noted.

She added that her dad serves as head umpire for Nova Scotia Curling and officiates at the provincial, national and world levels. He also coaches, helps with the junior program in Bridgewater and supports ice maintenance in Liverpool when needed.

He is also the chair of the committees that has hosted the 2014 Canadian Junior Curling Championships, the 2019 World Junior Curling Championships, the 2021 Pre-Trials and most recently, the 2025 Mixed Curling Doubles Curling Trials to Liverpool.

Thorbourne-Whalen said, “One of the greatest joys for me has been working alongside dad in the host society. Watching his vision come to life – and getting to be part of that journey with him – has been incredibly special.

“He poured his heart into every event, and I was lucky enough to see firsthand just how much care and energy he gave to make each one a success. We are incredibly proud of you, Dad. Thank you for everything you’ve done – not just in curling, but for our family, our community, and everyone luck enough to know you.”

Kathy Siddell, who has volunteered at several of the events hosted by Greg and his team, nominated him for the award.

“In December 2024, I was volunteering at the national seniors curling in London where Greg was part of the umpiring team. It was there that I asked his permission to nominate him as a candidate for the hall of fame,” she said. “So, Greg’s response was that no one would support him... boy was he wrong. Part of the application process was providing letters of support. Every single person I asked, responded and sent their letters including three national letters of endorsements.”

She noted that he has already been named as the chief umpire for the Olympic Pre-Trials in Wolfville in October and as umpire at the Olympic Trials in Halifax. Following this event, he will achieve his Level 4 umpire certification, leaving him just one event away from achieving Level 5, the highest level for non-season of champion certification.

“His 60 years in curling are worthy of a true celebration he continues to share his expertise and enthusiasm with the curling community. His legacy shines brightly,” said Siddell.

Aspiring young filmmakers earn awards

By KEVIN MCBAIN
kevin.mcbain@southshorebulletin.ca

LIVERPOOL – Two young filmmakers were co-winners of the 2025 People’s Choice Awards at the Atlantic International Film Festival (AIFF) for Kids this spring.

Desmond Smyth and Easton Goodwin’s short films (under five minutes) rose to the top of the 16 entries that were voted on by viewers May 26 to June 1 on the AIFF YouTube channel.

The two actually collaborated on a film in the previous year and they finished as runners-up in the same category.

Both are members of the Youth Filmmaking Club at the Astor Theatre, that just wrapped up their first season.

Smyth’s film was titled, November Moon.

He said that his main focus on the film was camera angles.

“I wanted to showcase my camera work more than anything and make it look nice and interesting to look at,” he said. “More than the plot or message of the movie. It’s kind of like a David Lynch inspired film.”

He said the film was about a teenager who’s haunted by ghosts and there’s something familiar about the things that are haunting him, but he can’t put his finger on it, and he is feeling guilty about what they’re telling him.

Smyth, 16, says that he always enjoyed film making and when he was younger he made YouTube videos of stop motion using Lego figures. Then it kind of evolved from there.

He does think that his film stood out a bit from the others, because it was meant to be open ended and “people could apply their own interpretations of what happens.”

He did have the help of his younger brother, Rayne, who played the ghost in the film.

Smyth said he learned a couple of things from working on the project, the first, “don’t leave everything until the last minute. I had the script ready for two months, but I was waiting for the right weather. I waited for a good foggy day to create the atmosphere.

“While I was waiting there were a few, but I had school and other things to do. When it came down to it, there was like just three days before the festival.”

Smyth said the second thing he learned was trying to do a film in under five minutes (as per the rules) isn’t as easy as it sounds.

“You would think that would be super easy, but it’s a lot harder to make a film under five minutes for me, than it is to make a super long film,” he said. “I had so many ideas and to try and pack it into five minutes was tough for me. I had a lot of stuff written down that was important to me, but I had to cut a lot too, which kind of sucked.”

He said being a part of the filmmaking club over the past year has been a good experience and he enjoys working with his friends.

The club is run by his parents Kyle and Lori Smyth.

Goodwin was the writer and producer of the film, Past Echoes.

The 17-year-old is a graduate of Liverpool Regional High School.

He said his film basically tells the story of his life.

“The reason I started making film was to express myself. Growing up, I had a hard time expressing myself and film was one of the ways I could put my feelings out there, although I was the only one who could understand it. It was a way to take away stress and I enjoy it very much,” he said.

“This is a film that hits home for me. It’s based on pieces of my life and pieces of my family’s life. The film follows a young boy growing up in a small town and he deals with anxiety and some aspects of depression and bullying as well. He eventually finds his place in acting, film and theatre.”

Goodwin recruited many members of the filmmaking club, for which he is grateful.

“The film club has helped a lot and it’s full of really talented people that put in a lot of time and effort. I hope it continues and more people will come out,” he said.

Was he surprised at the award?

“I was super surprised. I never thought I would win an award, because my, Past Echoes, has a different aspect and can be a bit hard to understand. I like to make weird movies, ones that you really have to think about. I was really surprised and to share it with Desmond was an absolute honour.”

The Youth Filmmakers Club at the Astor Theatre started in September 2024 and continued through to June of this year. The club is for those ages 14-17 and they met each Monday evening for two hours at the Astor Theatre.

South Shore artists take on Trump

By ED HALVERSON
ed.halverson@southshorebulletin.ca

LUNENBURG - An exhibition at the Lunenburg School of the Arts is showcasing Canadian pride.

“Elbows Up” features work by dozens of artists created in response to comments made by U.S. President Donald Trump about Canada becoming the 51st state as well as the president’s decision to engage our country in a tariff war.

The exhibition’s name was borrowed from a popular hockey phrase popularized by Toronto born comedian Mike Myers in an appearance on the late-night television show Saturday Night Live.

A reception held Thursday, June 26 saw a large crowd gathered at the Lunenburg School of the Arts to hear opening comments by event co-producer Senator Wilfred Moore and author Michael Harris. Harris spoke at length about the threat Trump’s actions pose not just to Canada but to the foundations of democracy.

Douglas Bamford co-produced the exhibit with Moore. Bamford says the show reveals how artists process big ideas. He quoted the late British Prime Minister Winston Churchill who was asked why, in a time of war, his government made such an effort to preserve art and keep the museums open.

“He (Churchill) said, art, that’s what we’re fighting for because it’s the most outward expression of a culture. Art is all about a country’s culture and people.” said Bamford.

He said the artists use their medium to reflect those ideas to their audience. “There’s a little bit of humour. Some of them are very pointed, and that’s another way to process. But it’s about processing troubled times.”

The Elbows Up exhibition will be on display at the Lunenburg School of the Arts until Aug. 10.

Following the event, Thorbourne was asked – what is it about curling?

“Working with people, working with the youth through coaching and through umpiring, you meet some of the best people in the world and you make friends for life,” he said.

When asked if there were any highlights?

“Not really. Everything goes together and I am so glad that I could contribute to the sport,” he said. “I guess though, bringing the nationals in and the big events to Liverpool and helping the economy and putting the town on the map for hosting events. Things like that make me feel good.”

He also thanked his family for their support over the years and all of the volunteers who have been by his side to step up and help put on the events.

“Looking around at the crowd, 90 per cent of you should be there too, for the work that you’ve done,” he said, with a humble grin.

A policy won't build your culture; but it can reveal it

STEPHANIE MILLER VINCENT
Business Moments

I want to talk about why this matters. Yes, a new regulation is coming. And yes, it's being mandated by the government. But let's set the legislation aside for a minute. Let's talk about why this really matters to you, your team, and your business. Starting Sept. 1, 2025, all employers in Nova Scotia must have a policy to prevent and address workplace harassment. No matter your industry, no matter your size, if you have employees, this applies to you.

And here's the deeper truth: A policy on its own won't change your workplace. So, what will? The conversations that come from it. The clarity it creates. The courage it calls forward. This is more than a document. This is about how people treat one another at work. It's about what gets addressed... and what gets ignored. It's about what kind of environment you're actively building and what kind of behaviour you're unconsciously allowing. The strongest workplaces aren't the ones that put up posters.

They're the ones where respect is felt, not just stated. When a business chooses to lead with these values because they want to, not just because they have to, something shifts. Trust deepens. Conversations open up. Accountability becomes part of the everyday rhythm. And over time? That kind of culture becomes your reputation. It's what makes you the place people want to work. It's what makes clients and customers feel safe, seen, and welcome. A great place to work becomes a great place to do business. And a great place to do business?

Builds its legacy on the strength of its people. So yes, the regulations matter. But what matters more is who you choose to be as a leader because of it. Not every workplace will rise to this challenge with heart. But the ones that do? They won't just meet the moment. They'll define what comes next. *Stephanie Miller Vincent is the founder of SMillerVision, helping service-based businesses lead with clarity, intention, and heart. Is it time to change the filter?

SUSANNE BECK
Reality Check

Filters are useful. If we don't have the right air filter, oil filter, or coffee filter, some tasks just can't be done. We have other filters too; ones that we can't see but that still affect our lives. Their effects show up in our attitudes, our relationships, even how we see reality. Dr. Glasser's Choice Theory suggests that while our senses detect sights, sounds, smells, etc., our perceptual system filters that information through what he calls a knowledge filter and a valuing filter. Because there are almost certainly differences between your filters and my filters, we're working with different information even when we're in the same environment. For example, let's say that you and I take a walk together in a summer meadow. You are an expert in butterfly identification. I dislike insects. Thus, our knowledge filters and valuing filters are different.

When we return, we're asked, "How was your walk?" You respond enthusiastically, talking about the swallow-tails and the skippers that you spotted. I, on the other hand, gripe about the horseflies, mosquitos, and wasps. It's as if we were on two different walks! The reality was the same; the difference was in what we noticed and how we valued it. Your knowledge filter connected the butterflies you saw with information you already have, making your walk an exciting and satisfying experience. My lack of that knowledge, combined with a value filter that essentially says, "Insects are nasty pests," made my walk considerably less enjoyable. Can having an understanding of these filters help us understand other people? And maybe even better understand ourselves? I think so. We could look at filters as a tool. Like any tool, the filter itself is neither good nor bad. It's just a tool. Here are two ways where being aware of filters can be helpful. First, knowing about our filters helps to explain how two people can see or hear the same information and respond very differently. We know from our walk in the butterfly meadow that what we see, hear, and understand depends on what we already believe, what we value, our perceptions of ourselves and others, and so on. Remembering that each of us is working with filtered information may not help us agree, but it might encourage us to be a little more tolerant of different opinions. Second, when we treat our filters as tools, we can choose to gain some control over them. For example, I had mentioned to my friend Al that I was disappointed in a book I'd bought some time back. Al suggested that I read it again; perhaps what I've learned since might help me see it in a different way. I respect Al, so I gave it a try. When I began re-reading, I remembered what had put me off. Some sentences were awkward, punctuation wasn't perfect, and a few conclusions looked more like wishful thinking than objective analysis. My value filter kicked in with, "This guy isn't a very good writer." However, aware of my filter, I persevered. I'm not suggesting that the book suddenly became a favourite, but I was able to glean useful information that I had missed the first time when my filter had coloured the entire work with disdain. Our filters can be helpful. They can weed out the non-essential, dismiss the unhelpful, and steer us toward our priorities. But they could also distort reality. Try your own experiment. Think of someone or something that you don't like, and deliberately look again from a mindset of, "Is my filter helping me get a true understanding? Or not?" See what you find. Then let me know at choice@focusonclarity.com or by mail c/o South Shore Bulletin. To your choices! ~ Susanne ~ Susanne Beck, RTC is Reality Therapy Certified by the William Glasser Institute

A promising season for the piping plover

JAMES HIRTLE
Bird Notes

Sue Abbott released an update for June 2025 on piping plovers nesting on our beaches across Nova Scotia.

There was a total of 65 pairs; eight singles and 72 nests with 31 fledglings at greater than or equivalent to 20 days old. In northern Nova Scotia there were 14 pairs not including two pairs that lost nests and left the beach that they were on.

There were also three singles, 17 nests and two fledglings. In southern Nova Scotia there were 51 pairs, five singles, 55 nests and 29 fledglings.

Of interest were a first nest record at Caribou-Munroe's Island Provincial Park and a first known nest at Ragged Harbour in East Berlin since 2018. Locally, at Cherry Hill Beach, there were two pairs, one of which has been successful in hatching chicks. Initially there were four young. I'm not sure if there still are four or not.

I visited the beach in heavy fog on July 1, keeping a long distance away from the nesting location and I only saw two chicks. These chicks are still only about 10 days old. So, they still have a way to go before reaching fledging age at 20 days.

It is that time of year when things have really slowed down in regards to special birds and sightings. I found three short-billed dowitchers at Sand Dollar Beach in Rose Bay on June 27. These would be early migrants starting back through.

On June 29, David McCorquodale discovered a Philadelphia vireo at New Elm. A wood stork was sighted in Chester and photographed, but it did not stay around. This bird was also seen three days before the Chester sighting at Portuguese Cove in flight.

On June 26 Logan Moore found a Tennessee warbler at Lower L'Ardoise in Richmond County. Angela MacDonald posted a report of seven short-billed dowitchers at New Harbour on June 27.

On June 29 Ronnie d'Entremont saw the first short-billed dowitchers back at Pont du Marais at West Pubnico. David McCorquodale reported a laughing gull at Daniel's Head on Cape Sable Island on June 30.

Bertin d'Eon had a great egret at the end of Eel Pond Road. On July 1 Logan Moore discovered a singing house wren at Concession in Digby County. Ronnie d'Entremont found a black-billed cuckoo at the Pubnico Lake Road.

A Stellar eagle showed up in Newfoundland. Hopefully it will come our way.

Area schools well represented at national science fair

Ghaffari took on this study, because...

"I found people, especially in my age group, decide to buy products without looking at the ingredients list to find out what they are putting on their bodies, on their skin and in their hair, so I wanted to see if those mass-produced products actually help."

This was also her second time at the event and said that she had a great time and met lots of new people.

Singh is 15 and is in Grade 10 at Park View Education Centre.

He was studying Electro-Magnetic Launch System and how it would work to launch spacecraft into space.

He said it is being used a bit in many Asian countries and using this system, it would reduce the carbon footprint by 90 per cent.

"I was reading an article about how space launches contribute a significant cause of depletion of the ozone layer," he said, adding that part of the project is now being used in MRI machines, and said, "There is still work that needs to be done."

It was also his second year at the national event and said that it was a great experience and he received good feedback which helped improve his project.

Jane Berrigan is the regional co-ordinator and has been to many CWSF events and can't say enough about the opportunities available to students through the program.

“It is such an opportunity to grow with a group of like-minded people and over and above any of the scientification, that personal growth for the students is incredible. It’s an eye-opening experience,” she said, adding that her biggest job is to open doors for the students and give them the opportunity to walk through them.

She said there are so many scholarships, award money, scholarships, opportunities to attend international competitions and even chances to work with university professors and organizations.

Unfortunately, she said, within the South Shore Regional Centre for Education, very few students try out for science fairs, especially from the older age groups. Singh was the only one to advance from the local school division to the national level over Grade 9.

Berrigan said that it is a lot of work. The students have to go through a lot of work to get to the national event. On average, about 40 hours are put into each project and they have to get through the local school fair, the regional, provincials, and then the nationals. Through each level, students can modify, add more testing, and do more analysis to improve their project based on feedback from the judges and mentors like Berrigan.

Berrigan said it was so great to see the local students do well, despite some disadvantages.

“Just think our little place in Bridgewater, and we can go and compete at that level. We are at an obvious disadvantage from larger centres, but we are doing well.”

She said that students from the cities, and ones that have universities, have a much larger resource pool to draw from.

All in all, she is very proud of the students and their efforts in taking on big, real-world problems, such as the cosmetic industry, or the effects of salt water on skin, music and mathematics, and looking at a real-world solution for propulsion.

Berrigan and the students also added that the CWSF isn't just about the projects, but also about preparation of life in university. They live on campus for six days, eat at the cafeteria, and get a taste for what is to come. There are also social events and a university fair, where many universities send representatives to answer questions and recruit up-and-comers.

Two people charged after traffic stop leads to a firearm seizure

SOUTH SHORE BULLETIN STAFF

SEFFERENVILLE – Two people were arrested, and a firearm was seized by RCMP officers during a traffic stop on Hwy. 12 near Lunenburg.

On June 28, at approximately 1:50 a.m., officers on proactive patrols from the Lunenburg RCMP Detachment came across a vehicle stopped on the roadway. The officers completed a traffic stop to confirm the safety of the occupants and found two people asleep in the vehicle with the engine running. Beer cans and a firearm were observed inside the vehicle.

The driver and passenger were both safely arrested, and the loaded shotgun was seized. The driver of the vehicle was transported to the Lunenburg RCMP Detachment where he provided breath samples that registered 150mg% and 140 mg%.

“We all know the safety risks that come with impaired driving, and adding a firearm to this situation made it much more dangerous,” says S/ Sgt. Dave Ferguson, Lunenburg District RCMP Commander, in a media release. “Public safety was the main priority for the officers involved, from the initial check on the vehicle’s occupants to safely seizing the firearm and preventing the driver from continuing to operate the car while impaired.”

The driver, Kegan Melvin, 21, of Martins Point, is charged with Impaired Operation of a Conveyance, Unsafe Storage of a Firearm, and Unauthorized Possession of a Firearm in a Motor Vehicle. The passenger, Hunter Rafuse, 21, of Bridgewater, is charged with Unsafe Storage of a Firearm and Unauthorized Possession of a Firearm in a Motor Vehicle. Both were released from custody and will appear in Bridgewater Provincial Court at a later date.

Bluenose Golf Club to honour Angus Walters

SOUTH SHORE BULLETIN STAFF

LUNENBURG - The historic Bluenose Golf Club in Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, will celebrate its pride and salute our heritage this summer by unveiling a tribute to Lunenburg icon – Capt. Angus Walters.

The property owner, Ron Kaulbach, and the Bluenose Golf Club have commissioned Da Vinci in Wood, a Tantallon-based company to create a life-sized statue of Angus Walters, which will stand sentinel at the golf course entrance on Tannery Road.

The tribute to Capt. Walters will be unveiled Tuesday, July 15 at 5:30 pm.

“It was the idea of property owner Ron Kaulbach. We had to take down a number of dead trees along the driveway and Ron thought it would be nice to have a carving for the club and the town,” said Craig Munroe, president of the Bluenose Golf Club.

“We ended up going with Angus Walters which we thought was a nice tribute to the town and it was kind of neat to that when the golf course was established in 1933, Angus Walters was the captain of the Bluenose. That kind of ties in a bit to the golf course.”

The carving will be about six feet in height and will depict Capt. Walters behind the wheel of a schooner.

Capt. Walters skippered the original Bluenose from 1921 to 1938. Known as the Queen of the North Atlantic, the original Bluenose was a fishing vessel, but she and Capt. Walters gained international fame and considerable glory via a storied racing career capturing many international victories.

The replica, Bluenose II, built in 1963, still sails today as Nova Scotia’s Ambassador to the World.

Capt. Walters and the Bluenose were inducted in the Canadian Sports Hall of Fame in 1955. The Bluenose was the first non-human to be enshrined in the Hall.

Capt. Walters died in 1968 at the age of 87. In 2005 he was named a Person of National Historic significance.

King says she communicated with the town throughout the construction process and that town staff were involved in finalizing the design and ensuring it was built according to that plan. She says the town signed off on the permit, and she has approvals from the fire marshal and liquor inspectors for the addition.

King says rerouting the sidewalk is necessary to provide an enclosed area that will allow the restaurant to meet Nova Scotia liquor sales laws and to provide a safe environment for patrons, staff and pedestrians. King says restaurant staff routinely carry hot drinks and food to tables and if they had to navigate an open sidewalk with dogs on leashes, baby strollers, and other pedestrians it would be dangerous for everyone involved.

The temperature of the threats rose considerably last week following Mahone Bay town council’s special meeting to discuss revoking the permit for the restaurant’s sidewalk patio. After deciding to have staff prepare a report on the existing bylaw that allows sidewalk patios, Mayor Suzanne Lohnes-Croft made a motion to have the patio permit immediately revoked and the patio removed. That motion was unanimously defeated as council await the staff report.

Since the meeting King says she has seen an uptick in online threats and a co-ordinated effort by people leaving negative reviews on hospitality ranking websites to drive down the restaurant’s favourability. Protesters have picketed the restaurant, taken video and accosted customers while they are eating. King says her staff have been harassed and bullied by protesters walking in off the street.

King is concerned that even in an online message of condolence, the Town of Mahone Bay is insinuating by building the sidewalk patio she is responsible for Minard’s death. The message reads:

“We are deeply saddened by the passing of Barbara Minard, a remarkable woman who touched many lives in our community. Her death, following a fall, has been a difficult loss. The fall occurred while she was out enjoying a day in town.

Our heartfelt condolences go out to Barbara’s family and friends during this painful time. We have been in touch with her loved ones, and above all, we want to respect and support their need for privacy during their time of grief.

We understand that many members of the community associate her passing with the fall that happened near a newly built sidewalk patio in Town. We know there are questions, and we hear the calls for accountability and transparency.

Barb will be dearly missed. As a town, we are committed to doing our due diligence in reviewing the circumstances surrounding the initial fall. Thank you for your patience, compassion, and care as we honour her memory and seek clarity.”

King has asked the town to remove the post but as of this writing, it is still online.

King says Barbara Minard’s passing, “is tragic and our thoughts are with Barb and her family. Barb has been a treasured customer of the restaurant since we opened.” And that Minard, “was part of our family and will be greatly missed. She was thankful for the access we provided for her and all who deserve access. There are very few places in Mahone Bay that are accessible, and we are one of them.”

King says she has gone to great lengths to build a patio that is safe and accessible to everyone. She has new signs in place to clearly indicate the public walkway and is installing metal plates to ensure a smooth transition between the patio and the town sidewalk.

King understands people are grieving the loss of a pillar of the community but that no one should have to live with the threatening behaviour she and her staff have had to endure. She is hopeful cooler heads will prevail so she and her staff can continue welcoming their friends, neighbours and community through their doors.

Flying Fish Theatre presents

The Rum Runners' Ball - a musical comedy ... with dinner!

SUBMITTED ARTICLE

LUNENBURG - Mahone Bay's Flying Fish Theatre returns for the second season of The Rum Runners' Ball, with 15 performances of Reid Campbell's musical featuring quirky characters and original toe-tapping tunes, every Wednesday at Bluenose Lodge in Lunenburg that started June 18 and will run until Sept. 24.

Set during one of Nova Scotia's most spirited historical periods, The Rum Runners' Ball takes place in Lunenburg during 1930s Prohibition. The play tells the "almost" true stories of Lunenburg and Nova Scotia's South Shore when rum running was a vital part of the local economy.

The show features a cast of colourful characters, including the wily Snuffer Pearl and his bootlegging sidekick Betty Hirtle. Along for the ride are the no-nonsense Blanche Keddy, head of local Temperance Union and man about town, Henry Oickle.

The Rum Runners' Ball features original songs like "Betty the Hoocher", "Call of the Demon Rum" and "I Hate the Sea" (a tribute to anyone who's ever regretted the voyage). The show is equal parts history, hilarity, and heart.

"Our goal with The Rum Runners' Ball is to celebrate the local legends of Lunenburg in the most entertaining way possible," says Laurel Darnell, co-creator of Flying Fish Theatre. "These stories and characters are inspired by local figures, and the music is all original.

At past performances, we've had audience recognize their family members as characters in the show!"

The company of actors and musicians includes Reid Campbell, Laurel Darnell and Bruce Jollymore with special direction by Sue Evans. "It's an entertaining evening of dinner and theatre with a kick... of rum."

The Rum Runners' Ball, a musical comedy performed by Flying Fish Theatre, is back for its second season at the Bluenose Lodge in Lunenburg.

And while the music and stories will transport you to another era, Bluenose Lodge staff will take care of you every step of the way. Guests attending The Rum Runners' Ball will begin their experience with a three-course meal from a menu created by Bluenose Lodge's Chef, Chris Ferguson.

For each performance, dinner begins at 7 p.m. and the show begins at 8 p.m.

Tickets for the show are $115 + HST and include a three-course dinner, a shot of rum, gratuities and the performance of The Rum Runners' Ball.
